Dear Mayor and Council:

I wrote a letter to the paper a couple weeks ago and then I heard that the mayor was labeling it as misinformation so I would like to clarify. I didn't say that the developer had applied for a rezone. The letter said that in the beginning that is what the developer wanted.

I sent my letter to him by text as I promised I would, and he wrote to me in a text "Yes I did say that was what we initially wanted but we're too far in now to switch directions it would be way too expensive and time consuming thanks BRANDON sorry if I didn't make that clear"

Somehow my words were interpreted by the Mayor and Planner as a totally different thing. The mayor said at the recent council meeting that I had written that the developer applied for the rezone and was denied by the town. Please reread my words. I didn't say that he applied for a rezone and was denied. Where did that come from?

Sorry if I didn't make that clear but a careful reading of my letter is what should have happened before my reputation was damaged. Even the developer supported that what I wrote was correct.

But if you are going to malign me in a public forum as a spreader of mis and disinformation, please check your original source - the letter itself. Ramon, that was unkind and incorrect - and hurtful.

Healthy regards,

Linda Talman
